

Welcome to Madrid

The Teatro de la Zarzuela, declared a Site of General Interest in the Monument category in 1994, is the first and only theatre of Spanish lyrical. Located in the heart of the centre, behind the Courts, it has always promoted the music of the Spanish lyrical genre and the best pieces from the repertoire are still sung and heard today.

The theatre has had a long history of events since its inauguration in 1856. The most famous Spanish operettas were premiered here. In 1909 a fire destroyed the entire building, opening again in 1913. After the Civil War it went into decline until in 1956 (exactly a century after its inauguration), it was acquired by the General Society of Authors. It is currently owned by the Ministry of Culture.

It has 1,218 seats.

Accessibility

General

There are mechanic installations for persons with reduced mobility from the street to the lobby and from there to the seating area and also a completely adapted direct ramp access at the front right side of the theater. There is also an adapted toilet at the ground floor. The building also has a completely adapted elevator that connects all the floors of the theater.
